A Tale of Two Cities: The Art of Remembering

Memorization is an art practiced since Ancient Greece. Its techniques constantly change according to the technology preferred by the times. Memory is the key to form an individual's identity, thus forging a collective identity. Some nineteenth century critics focus on how writers incorporated memory as part of the formation of identity in their novels. In centuries before people practiced memory techniques in order to remember important events or arguments. It was important to have a good memory since they still relied on their mind rather than paper for some aspects of their daily life.
